Pobrecito bebe meaning

Hey everyone! I wonder if someone can help me? I came to know a Cuban man. I think I developed feelings for him, and was looking for some sort of term of endearment to use for him. I used to have a teacher who was Cuban and would often say (I think) the poorer one who I understand means to have poor babies. So it would be appropriate to call a man you're dating (or want to be dating) cito? I can't find it in any dictionary except as a congregation of citar. Did I not hear correctly? Or maybe I autopled wrong (something spelled different but sounds the same way?). I do not want to call him Papi, or Papito ... maybe one day, but something on baby lines other than sibe? Any appreciated help! Thank you! - Dayv Pobrecito, although a composite word, does not include the word for infants in Spanish. You wouldn't go on calling someone you love a baby; call someone you like the baby very English. You can tell querido. Bien Cito is not a name He is a diminished suffix. (along with him/him/sita/and a bunch of others) Pobre = Poor Pobrecito = Poor It's Guy Pobre Means Poor, and Pobrecito, and the End of Decrease, means poor little things. You can go for generic terms of endowment, such as cariño (expensive), querido (expensive, again), chulo (chutie) ... amorcito (little love) ... There were other requests in this type of forum, so you could check whatever was said with the search function. Pobrecito, is used sometimes as a term of endearment. It is done with pobre more sito to finish. Pobrecito: Baby Poor. It is not a word, but an ending in this context. In another context, sito, means I quote. Infinite: Nationals. Cito is a suffix to detect an endearment. But this is used to giving it a personal touch. Usually, children are the ones that this applies. If the person is a grown-up, you better use cariño. However, if it's just between the two of you, you can call each other whatever name would please you both. After all, the rest would have nothing to do with your own themes of endearment. Thank you all so much for answering (and so quickly)! I'm very happy I was wondering before an understanding from 15 years ago made me say something that would end up stupid sound!
